

Sanseveria trifasciata

Mother-in-Law's Tongue, Snake Plant

One of the most happy-go-lucky plant you could grow. It is also described as an indestructible plant that can tolerate neglect by responding to good care by growing sturdy, sword-shaped laves, which often are edged with yellow or white. Clean them periodically with a damp cloth to maintain that glossy sheen. As the plant gets older, it sometimes produces clusters of white flowers in Winter.

Light: This plant can be placed anywhere in a room from the darkest corner to the brightest window. The better the light, the faster it will grow.

Water: Over-watering is the main reason a Sansevieria Plant would die. Allow the soil to completely dry out before watering. During the Winter, in a low light area, a Sansevieria Plant needs water only once a month. When in doubt, DO NOT water your Sansevieria!

Fertilizing: From late Spring through Fall, feed month with a well-balanced houseplant fertilizer mixed at ½ half the recommended strength. In the Winter, don't feed.

Tips:

- Repot in Spring every 2 to 3 years.
- Prefers low humidity.
- Sansevieria's are air-purifying plants.
- They are mildly poisonous.
- They loved to be rootbound in small pots.
- Sansevieria plants seem to be immune to houseplant pests.
